Cellnex Telecom, one of Europe's main independent operators of wireless telecommunications broadcasting infrastructures, has signed up to the United Nations Global Compact as an expression of its commitment to internationalising the concept of corporate social responsibility in its operational strategy and organisational culture. The United Nations Global Compact is an international voluntary initiative that includes more than 8,000 companies and institutions across 135 countries.

With this agreement, Cellnex Telecom takes on a commitment to promote and spread corporate sustainability policies and practices based on the ten key principles promoted by the United Nations, focusing on the areas of human rights, labour standards, environment and anti-corruption in the business activities of companies. The United Nations Global Compact is a practical framework that offers its signatories a wide range of management tools and useful resources for building a responsible business model.

Cellnex Telecom's commitment to the United Nations Global Compact is part of its Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) programme, fully integrated among the links of the value chain that the company is creating. It is a strategic plan based on implementing actions to ensure the sustainability of the business model in its various dimensions (economic, social and environmental) and improving dialogue with all stakeholders, especially the company working team, its customers, suppliers and contractors, administrations and the community as a whole.

In the words of Tobías Martínez, Managing Director of Telecom Cellnex, "one of our principles as a company is to promote and support those who advocate international standards of ethics and corporate responsibility, which is why we decided to sign up to the United Nations Global Compact. We trust that the Global Compact will continue to grow, with more and more companies committed to its aims, because that will mean that we are more aware of the practices that we must develop in order to consolidate truly sustainable company and business models".

Cellnex Telecom

Cellnex Telecom is Europe's leading independent operator of wireless telecommunications and broadcasting infrastructures.

It offers sites to rent for telecommunications operators and provides the most advanced audiovisual services to national, regional and local broadcasters.

Over the past four years, Cellnex Telecom has made a firm commitment to developing a network of over 15,000 sites and has enjoyed strong growth in the mobile phone towers area through agreements with operators like Telefónica and Yoigo in Spain, the purchase of the Italian company TowerCo in 2014, and the recent acquisition of 7,400 towers in Italy following the agreement with WIND to gain control of Galata.

It also develops solutions in the "smart city" projects field and has rolled out a smart communications network making it possible to connect objects and develop a strong ecosystem for the Internet of Things (IoT) in Spain.

Cellnex Telecom also plays a key role in rolling out telecommunications networks for security and emergency forces.
