For whom?

With what purpose?
 To influence directly or indirectly in a decision or to condition the conduct of who receives said gift, present, hospitality or similar benefit.

Are there exceptions?
 Yes, the established limitations and requirements may be checked on a case-by-case basis if required.

Requirements and limitations to accept Gifts, Hospitalities and other Similar Benefits:

- 1 They must comply with the applicable in-force legislation within the corresponding country.
- 2 They must not contradict, in any way, Cellnex's Code of Ethics, the Corruption Prevention Procedure or its development rules.

- 4 Their purpose must not be to influence Third Parties, to keep or gain any benefit or improper business nor to gain or exchange any special treatment (other than the normal business circumstances).
- 5 They must not induce the giver or recipient of it not to perform their professional activity in an independent and objective way.

When should I be suspicious?

A question checklist which we should ask ourselves in case of doubt regarding whether a gift, hospitality or similar benefit can be accepted is the following:

Does it exceed 100 euros?

Is it cash, gift cards or any support that facilitates the transfer of money?

Can I openly and transparently show it to others?

Is it against the internal or external applicable regulation?

Would I be in trouble if this was published by the press?

Does it influence my sales relationships with my clients, suppliers, partners or Third Parties?

Does it affect my professional activity in a subjective way?

Does the acceptance of the gift generate preferential treatment?
